

A Abdul Aziz bin Mohamed Shariff v Public Prosecutor

FEDERAL COURT (PUTRAJAYA) — CRIMINAL APPEAL NO 05–9 OF 2008(N)

B RICHARD MALANJUM CJ (SABAH AND SARAWAK), AUGUSTINE
PAUL AND JAMES FOONG FCJJ
16 MARCH 2010

C Criminal Law — Murder — Appeal against conviction and sentence — Whether misdirection by trial judge — Whether courts below erred in failure to consider available defence of intoxication — Whether appellant incapable of forming intention or knowledge to commit murder — Whether trial judge misdirected on standard of proof

D On 7 April 2000, the appellant went to Balakrishnan a/l Karuppusamy's ('the deceased') house, wearing a mask to hide his identity and slashed the deceased to death. The appellant's identity was exposed by the deceased's wife, who was E present at the material time, and had put up a struggle against the appellant.
The appellant was subsequently arrested and charged for murder. In his defence the appellant raised the defence of provocation and testified that he was provoked by the deceased to commit the murder. The High Court found him guilty of the charge and sentenced him to death in accordance with s 302 of the F Penal Code. His appeal to the Court of Appeal was dismissed and hence the present appeal. In this appeal the appellant submitted that he had no intention to commit the murder because he was intoxicated. It was the appellant's contention that the failure of the High Court and the Court of Appeal to take into account this element of intoxication amounted to a misdirection that should result in his acquittal. However, throughout his trial both in the High G Court and the Court of Appeal, the appellant had not indicated that he was intoxicated when the offence was committed. The appellant submitted that evidence of the appellant's intoxication was adduced at the trial through the appellant's sister's testimony that the appellant was drunk while he was at her H house, which was before the commission of the crime. This claim was also confirmed by the appellant's nephew and further by the evidence of the appellant himself. It was thus submitted that the appellant's state of mind was affected by the quantity of spirit consumed before he committed the offence on that day. The main issue in this case was whether the courts below had erred in their failure to consider this available defence of intoxication, despite the
I appellant not having raised this at any time during the trial and later on appeal.

Held, dismissing the appeal:

- (1) The law is clear that it is incumbent upon the trial judge to direct himself to any available defence, whether raised or not raised by the accused, from the evidence before him. However, this case did not warrant the trial judge taking intoxication into consideration as a possible defence, even though not raised by the appellant, for the simple reason that there was no substantiating evidence to support the claim that intoxication had in fact incapacitated the intention of the appellant to commit the said crime. The prosecution had proved beyond reasonable doubt that the appellant intended to cause death to the deceased. Thus, even if the appellant had consumed a large quantity of alcohol before committing the crime he was not intoxicated to the extent that his intention to commit the crime had diminished. To prove intoxication it was encumbered upon the defence to adduce sufficient evidence to convince the court that this had rendered the accused incapable of forming the necessary intention or knowledge to commit the murder. The evidence of the appellant having consumed a large quantity of alcohol and the opinions of relatives, who were not medically qualified, that the appellant was drunk was insufficient to constitute a possible defence of intoxication. On the other hand, the evidence of the appellant wearing a mask when he committed the crime showed that the crime must have been pre-planned and that it could not have been conceived by an intoxicated person. Further, the fact that the appellant was able to ride his motorcycle to various locations some distance apart before the commission of the crime showed that he was mentally alert. In fact all these circumstantial facts strongly support the presence of an intention to commit the murder rather than being diminished by intoxication (see paras 7, 16–17).

A

B

C

D

E

F

- (2) The fact that the judgment was in two parts and that these two were not bound into one single volume was a trivial matter. This practice is acceptable as long as there is, at the end of the trial, a speaking judgment which is comprehensible (see para 20).

G

- (3) The trial judge had not misdirected himself on the standard of proof required of the defence. Having read the judgment of the High Court in its entirety, particularly the reasons advanced to support the decision, the error caused by the addition of the phrase ‘on the balance of probability’ was insufficient to affect his finding that the appellant was guilty of the crime as charged (see paras 22–23).

H

[Bahasa Malaysia summary]

Pada 7 April 2000, perayu telah pergi ke rumah Balakrishnan a/l Karuppusamy (‘si mati’), memakai topeng untuk menyembunyikan pengenalannya dan mengelar si mati hingga mati. Pengenalan perayu didedahkan oleh isteri si mati yang ada pada masa material, dan telah bergelut dengan perayu. Perayu kemudiannya ditangkap dan dituduh membunuh. Perayu di dalam

I

- A pembelaannya membangkitkan pembelaan provokasi dan memberi keterangan bahawa dia telah diberangsangkan oleh si mati untuk melakukan pembunuhan. Mahkamah Tinggi mendapati dia bersalah terhadap tuduhan dan menghukum dia sampai mati berikutan s 302 Kanun Keseksaan. Rayuannya ke Mahkamah Rayuan ditolak dan maka rayuan ini.
- B Dalam rayuan ini perayu berhujah bahawa dia tidak berniat untuk melakukan pembunuhan kerana dia mabuk. Ia adalah hujahan perayu bahawa kegagalan Mahkamah Tinggi dan Mahkamah Rayuan untuk mengambilkira unsur kemabukan ini terjumlah kepada salah arah yang patut mengakibatkan pembebasannya. Walau bagaimanapun, sepanjang perbicaraannya di Mahkamah Tinggi dan
- C Mahkamah Rayuan, perayu tidak menunjukkan bahawa dia mabuk apabila kesalahan dilakukan. Perayu berhujah bahawa keterangan kemabukan perayu dikemukakan di perbicaraan melalui keterangan kakak perayu bahawa perayu mabuk semasa dia di rumahnya, iaitu sebelum perlakuan jenayah tersebut.
- D Dakwaan ini juga disahkan oleh anak saudara lelaki perayu dan selanjutnya oleh keterangan perayu sendiri. Oleh itu diujahkan bahawa keadaan minda perayu dijejaskan oleh kuantiti alkohol yang diminum sebelum dia melakukan kesalahan pada hari itu. Isu utama dalam kes ini adalah sama ada Mahkamah Rayuan telah tersilap dalam kegagalannya untuk mempertimbangkan pembelaan kemabukan ini, walaupun perayu tidak membangkitkan perkara ini pada bila-bila masa semasa perbicaraan dan kemudiannya semasa rayuan.
- E

Diputuskan, menolak rayuan:

- (1) Undang-undang adalah jelas bahawa ia adalah penting bagi hakim perbicaraan untuk mengarahkan dirinya kepada mana-mana pembelaan yang sedia ada, sama ada dibangkitkan atau tidak dibangkitkan oleh tertuduh, daripada keterangan di hadapannya. Walau bagaimanapun kes ini tidak mewajarkan hakim perbicaraan mengambilkira kemabukan dalam pertimbangan sebagai pembelaan yang mungkin, walaupun tidak dibangkitkan oleh perayu, dengan alasan yang mudah bahawa tidak terdapat keterangan yang mencukupi untuk menyokong tuntutan bahawa kemabukan sebenarnya menghilangkan kelayakan niat perayu untuk melakukan jenayah tersebut. Pihak pendakwaan telah membuktikan melampaui keraguan yang munasabah bahawa perayu berniat untuk menyebabkan kematian si mati. Oleh itu, walaupun perayu telah minum kuantiti alkohol dalam kuantiti yang banyak sebelum melakukan jenayah tersebut dia tidak mabuk sehingga niat dia untuk melakukan jenayah tersebut telah berkurangan. Untuk membuktikan kemabukan, pembelaan mempunyai beban untuk mengemukakan keterangan yang mencukupi untuk meyakinkan mahkamah bahawa ini telah menyebabkan tertuduh tidak berupaya untuk membentuk niat yang perlu atau pengetahuan untuk melakukan pembunuhan. Keterangan perayu bahawa dengan meminum alkohol dalam kuantiti yang banyak
- F
- G
- H
- I

dan pendapat saudara maranya, yang tidak mempunyai kelayakan dari segi perubatan bahawa perayu mabuk, tidak mencukupi untuk membentuk pembelaan kemungkinan kemabukan. Sebaliknya, keterangan perayu memakai topeng apabila melakukan jenayah menunjukkan bahawa jenayah tersebut mesti telah dirancang terlebih dahulu dan bahawa ia tidak dapat difikirkan oleh orang yang mabuk. Selanjutnya, fakta bahawa perayu boleh menunggang motosikalnya ke beberapa lokasi yang berbeza jaraknya sebelum melakukan jenayah tersebut menunjukkan bahawa dia sedar. Hakikatnya kesemua fakta ikut keadaan secara kukuh menyokong kehadiran niat untuk melakukan pembunuhan daripada dikurangkan oleh kemabukan (lihat perenggan 7, 16–17).

- (2) Fakta bahawa penghakiman di dalam dua bahagian dan bahawa kedua-dua ini tidak terikat dalam satu jilid adalah perkara remeh. Amalan ini diterima selagi terdapat di akhir perbicaraan penghakiman umum yang boleh difahami (lihat perenggan 20).
- (3) Hakim perbicaraan tidak tersalah arah dirinya atas standard pembuktian yang memerlukan pembelaan. Setelah membaca penghakiman Mahkamah Tinggi secara keseluruhannya, terutamanya alasan-alasan yang dikemukakan untuk menyokong keputusan, kesalahan yang disebabkan oleh tambahan frasa 'atas imbalan kebarangkalian' tidak mencukupi untuk menjejaskan dapatan beliau bahawa perayu bersalah terhadap jenayah yang dituduh (lihat perenggan 22–23).]

Notes

For cases on murder generally, see 4 Mallal's Digest (4th Ed, 2005 Reissue) paras 1154–1167.

Cases referred to

- Broadhurst v The Queen* [1964] 2 WLR 38, PC (refd)
Jaafar bin Ali v PP [1998] 4 MLJ 406, HC (distd)
Juma'at bin Samad v PP [1993] 3 SLR 338, HC (refd)
K Saravanan all S Karuppiah v PP [2002] 3 MLJ 465; [2002] 4 CLJ 144, CA (refd)
Kenneth Fook Mun Lee v PP [2007] 2 MLJ 130, FC (folld)
Loo Geok Hong v PP [1961] MLJ 157, CA (refd)
Mohamad Radhi bin Yaakob v PP [1991] 3 MLJ 169, SC (refd)
PP v Ramasamy all Sebastian [1991] 1 MLJ 75, HC (refd)
Ramlan bin Salleh v PP [1987] 2 MLJ 709, SC (refd)
Rosli bin Supardi v PP [2002] 3 MLJ 256; [2002] 3 CLJ 544, CA (refd)

A Legislation referred to Courts of Judicature Act 1964 s 78

Penal Code ss 86(2), 300, 300(a), (b), (c), (d), 302

Karpal Singh (Ramkarpal Singh with him) (Karpal Singh & Co) for the appellant.

B Tengku Amir Zaki bin Tengku Abdul Rahman (Deputy Public Prosecutor, Attorney General's Chambers) for the respondent.

James Foong FCJ:C

[1] The appellant was charged for murdering one Balakrishnan a/l Karuppusamy ('the deceased') whose daughter, he was attempting to court. The deceased had opposed this liaison. On the 7 April 2000, the appellant proceeded to the deceased's residence wearing a mask to hide his identity and as the deceased opened the door of his house rushed in and slashed the deceased to death. The deceased's wife, who was present at the material time put up a struggle with the appellant and in the course of doing so unmasked the appellant and exposed his identity. The appellant was subsequently arrested, charged for murder and found guilty by the High Court. He was sentenced to death in accordance with s 302 of the Penal Code. His appeal to the Court of Appeal was dismissed; hence this appeal.

DE

[2] Throughout his trial, both in the High Court and the Court of Appeal, the appellant had not indicated that he was intoxicated when the offence was committed. His defence rested solely on provocation by the deceased. Now, in this appeal his counsel argued that the courts below had failed to consider this element of intoxication in arriving at their decisions. According to his counsel, he must be intoxicated after consuming large quantities of toddy and spirit prior to the commission of the crime. This could have had a bearing on his state of mind to commit the murder. In short, the intention to commit the said crime may be absent. Failure by the courts below to take this into account is a misdirection and therefore the appellant should be acquitted.

FG

[3] So the primary issue before this court is whether the courts below had erred in arriving at their decisions when they failed to consider this available defence of intoxication, despite the appellant not having raised this at any time during trial at first instance and on appeal.

H

I [4] It is a long established principle that:

A defence however weak and whether raised in evidence or even in a statement from the dock or by way of explanation must be left to the jury, R v Dinnick (1909) 3 Cr App R 77; Richards 4 Cr App R 161; R v Hills (1987) 86 Cr App R 26. Any point on which there is evidence which may afford a defence should be drawn to the attention of the jury, even if the defence has not raised it The King v Hooper [1915] 2 KB 431; (1915) 11 Cr App R 136 and even if it is inconsistent with the defence Rex v Thorpe 41 TLR 468; 18 Cr App R 189. The judge has great freedom in pointing out to the jury the value of the evidence or the improbability of the defence provided he puts the defence fairly to the jury. Further, if there is no evidence which might reduce a charge of murder to a lesser offence the judge should not leave the question of the lesser offence to the jury — per McElwaine CJ in Rex v Ong Choon [1938] MLJ 227.

A

B

[5] This was repeated by the Court of Appeal in Loo Geok Hong v Public Prosecutor [1961] MLJ 157 where at p 158 Thomson CJ advised:

C

Now, generally speaking, as a matter of law a judge sitting with a jury should put to the jury any defence available on the evidence irrespective of whether or not reliance has been placed on that defence at the trial or indeed irrespective of whether or not it has been mentioned by counsel at the trial.

D

[6] Again this was reiterated by the Supreme Court in Ramlan bin Salleh v Public Prosecutor [1987] 2 MLJ 709 at p 711:

In jury trial, the first duty of the judge in dealing with the defence case is to put to the jury the defence put up by the accused even if such defence appears to him to be too far fetched and ought to be rejected. Such defence may constitute a lesser offence than murder, or it may even be lesser than culpable homicide not amounting to murder. The trial judge is of course at liberty to comment on the evidence and in rare and appropriate cases may even make unfavourable remarks on the defence put up by the accused provided he makes it very clear to the jury that they are not bound by his view and opinion on issues of fact. His next duty is to put to the jury all available defences whether or not relied upon by the accused, having regard to the evidence. But as was held by the Court of Appeal in Loo Geok Hong v Public Prosecutor [1961] MLJ 157, the way in which the jury is to be directed on available defences is a matter for the trial judge having regard to the evidence with which he is concerned. What is important is the effect and not the form of the direction.

E

F

G

[7] As jury trial has been abolished, the law is clear that it is still incumbent upon the trial judge to direct himself to any available defences, whether raised or not raised by the accused, from the evidence before him.

H

[8] In this instance, evidence was adduced by the appellant's sister ('SP8') that the appellant went to her house before the incident and his condition was:

dia dalam keadaan mabuk kerana saya ada bau minuman keras apabila dia bercakap dengan saya. Masa itu saya sedang berada di rumah jiran saya. Anak saya Amir Hussin datang ke rumah jiran di mana saya berada dan beritahu saya 'mamu' ada datang tetapi dia mabuk ...

I

Lepas itu saya balik ke rumah dan berjumpa dengan Abd Aziz. Saya menegur dan memarahi dia kerana keadaannya yang mabuk itu.

A [9] This claim was confirmed by the appellant's nephew ('SP9') who testified:

B Apabila dia masuk ke dalam rumah dan minum air, emak saya ada di rumah kawannya. Saya pun pergi panggil emak saya dan beritahu dia 'mamu' mabuk. Mulutnya berbau. Lepas itu saya balik ke rumah dan layan pakcik.

[10] Further evidence of intoxication came from the appellant himself who said in his testimony on oath:

C Pada 7.4.2000 saya berada di Bahau dan bangun lebih kurang 12.00 tengah hari sebab tak ada kerja untuk menoreh hari itu. Sebelum itu saya ada diberitahu oleh kawan ada madu lebah di Rompin. Saya membawa bersama saya satu baldi dan sebilah parang. Saya ada berjumpa seorang kawan nama Ashok untuk mencari madu lebah. Asok pula ajak saya untuk pergi minum todi. Ada 2 orang lagi bersama Ganesh dan Prabakaran.

D Saya tiba di Rompin lebih kurang 2.30–3.00 petang dengan Ashok. Kami berdua tidak pergi ke kedai tersebut. Mereka pun pergi beli todi di Middleton Estet. Jaraknya saya tak tahu tetapi akan memakan masa 20 minit. Mereka pergi selama 2 jam.

E Seterusnya kami pergi ke sebuah ladang berhampiran dengan pekan untuk minum todi. Kami berada di ladang itu lebih kurang 1/2 jam. Kami berehat minum todi tersebut hingga habis.

F Selepas itu kami rasa todi tak cukup dan kami pun pergi beli minuman 'Chap Chong' dan menuju ke New Rompin Estet. Kami di situ hingga 7 malam. Kami berempat minum itu sehingga habis.

G [11] The appellant's counsel stressed that the appellant's state of mind would be affected by the quantity of spirit consumed before he committed the offence on that day. This would bring him within the fourth exception of s 300(d) of the Penal Code which reads:

Except in the cases hereinafter excepted, culpable homicide is murder —

H (d) if the person committing the act knows that it is so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death, or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, and commits such act without any excuse for incurring the risk of causing death, or such injury as aforesaid. (Emphasis added.)

I [12] And when considering whether the appellant 'knows' of the consequences of his act, due consideration must be paid to s 86(2) of the Penal Code which says:

Intoxication shall be taken into account for the purpose of determining whether the person charged had formed any intention, specific or otherwise, in the absence of which he would not be guilty of the offence.

[13] Obviously, this approach is unsustainable in the light of this court's decision in Kenneth Fook Mun Lee v Public Prosecutor [2007] 2 MLJ 130 at pp 146–147. There, the different mental conditions demanded by s 300 of the Penal Code was discussed in conjunction with s 86(2) of the Penal Code. To appreciate this, it is necessary to spell out all the four clauses of s 300 of the Penal Code which are:

Except in the cases hereinafter excepted, capable homicide is murder:

- (a) if the act by which the death is caused is done with the intention of causing death;
- (b) If it is done with intention of causing bodily injury as the offender knows to be likely to cause death of the person to whom the harm is caused;
- (c) If it is done with intention of causing bodily injury to any person, and the bodily injury intended to be inflicted is sufficient in the ordinary cause of nature to cause death; or
- (d) If the person committing the act knows that it is so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death, or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, and commits such act without any excuse for incurring the risk of causing death, or such injury as aforesaid.

[14] One would notice that in s 300(d) of the Penal Code, the word used to describe the mental element of the accused is: 'knows' as compared to s 300(a), (b) and (c) of the Penal Code which use the word 'intention'. And when one looks at s 86(2) of the Penal Code, the word used to describe the mental condition is 'intention' which is similar to that appearing in s 300(a), (b) and (c) of the Penal Code. This caused Yong Pung How CJ Singapore in the case of Juma'at bin Samad v Public Prosecutor [1993] 3 SLR 338 (which carries identical provisions as our Penal Code) to comment:

It is observed that cll (a), (b) and (c) of s 300 contemplate intention in one form or another. In cl (a), it is intention to cause death. In cll (b) and (c), it is intention to cause bodily injury. On the other hand, there is no requirement of an intention to cause death or bodily injury in cl (d) of s 300 ('cl (d)'). Thus, intention is not necessary element in cl (d); all that is required to be proved is knowledge that the act is likely to cause death (see Inder Singh v Crown ILR 1928 10 Lah 477). It has been held that this clause is intended to apply only when there is no intention to cause death, or in other words, when the three earlier clauses are inapplicable (see Hasta Ismail v Emperor AIR 1937 Lah 593; Behari v State AIR 1953 All 203). Section 86 is therefore applicable to cll (a), (b) and (c) of s 300 and inapplicable to cl (d).

In respect of this, Richard Malanjum FCJ (as he then was) in Kenneth Fook Mun Lee v Public Prosecutor sets out the Malaysian position as follows:

- A Our answer to the argument is that s 86(2) only affects those offences which require intention, specified or otherwise, and excludes other type of mens rea. But since cl (d), involves merely knowledge and not intention, it is therefore not within the ambit of s 86(2). Put, it in another way, intoxication is irrelevant in securing a conviction for murder if knowledge as per in cl (d) is proved beyond reasonable doubt by the prosecution. Such conclusion may appear to be preposterous. But it appears to be the position of the law for now. The difficulty posed by s 86(2) was recognised and discussed in the case of Juma'at bin Samad v Public Prosecutor where it was said ...
- B
- C [15] When s 86(2) of the Penal Code is not applicable for consideration in an offence under s 300(d) of the Penal Code, then what the appellant has submitted: that the trial judge has failed to take into account s 86(2) of the Penal Code for an offence under s 300(d) of the Penal Code must fail.
- D [16] Even if I were to consider the appellant's argument and apply s 86(2) of the Penal Code to the other clauses of s 300 of the Penal Code ie s 300(a), (b) and (c), where the mental state is described as 'intention' rather than 'knows', the fact remains that the circumstances of this case does not warrant the trial judge to take this into consideration as a possible defence, even though not raised by the appellant, for the simple reason that it lacks substantiating evidence to support the claim that intoxication had in fact incapacitated the intention of the appellant to commit the said crime — see Broadhurst v The Queen [1964] 2 WLR 38 at p 51. The reason is this: the prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that the appellant intended to cause death to the deceased. Even if the appellant had consumed a large quantity of alcohol before committing the crime he may not be intoxicated to the extent that his intention to commit the crime had diminished. The effect of alcohol varies substantially with different people. This was observed by Chao Hick Tin JC (as he then was) in the Singapore case of Public Prosecutor v Ramasamy all Sebastian [1991] 1 MLJ 75 at p 81 where he said that even 'blood alcohol level itself can never be conclusive to determine the degree of intoxication of the accused. Different people react differently to the same blood alcohol level. It makes a great difference whether the person is or is not an experienced drinker'. To prove intoxication, it is encumbered upon the defence to adduce sufficient evidence to convince the court that this had rendered the accused incapable of forming the necessary intention or knowledge to commit the crime charged, or that 'he was by reason of intoxication insane, temporarily or otherwise, at the time when he committed the crime'.
- H
- I [17] The existence of evidence that: (a) the appellant had consumed a large quantity of alcohol or that it was even mixed with toddy, coupled with (b) the presence of a strong smell of alcohol, and (c) the opinions of relatives who are not medically qualified, that the appellant was drunk is insufficient to constitute a possible defence of intoxication against the preponderance of evidence indicating that he had intended to cause death to the deceased. The appellant was masked at the time when he committed the crime. Obviously, he had planned to conceal his identity for the crime he intended to commit in order to avoid detection. This must have been pre-planned and could not have been conceived by an intoxicated person. Next, was the appellant's ability to ride his motorcycle to various locations some distance between each other before the commission of the crime without falling and injuring himself or getting involved in an accident. To avoid all these, he must be mentally alert and knew what he was doing. Such mental state of mind could not have suddenly disappeared when he stabbed the deceased to death. In fact all these circumstantial facts strongly support the presence of an intention to commit the murder rather than being diminished by intoxication. Under such circumstances it is my considered opinion that this ground of appeal has no merit.

A

B

C

D

[18] The appellant's counsel has also raised two other issues which are minor but for completeness I shall deal with them.

[19] The first concerns the judgment of the trial judge which is in two parts: one written after the close of the prosecution's case and the other after defence was called. For this, the appellant complained that this is against the law and cited the High Court case of Jaafar bin Ali v Public Prosecutor [1998] 4 MLJ 406 at p 424 in support.

E

F

[20] To begin, I must point out that the facts in Jaafar bin Ali v Public Prosecutor can be distinguished. In that case, the so called judgment was purportedly in three parts. One properly composed after defence was called and the other two: (i) reasons for calling the defence after close of prosecution case and (ii) reasons for the sentence imposed are found in the notes of evidence. I agree that it is desirable to have a comprehensive judgment encompassing all aspects of the case but it is not unprecedented for a trial judge, as in this case, to write a proper judgment giving his grounds on why defence was called and another on why he disbelieved the defence. The only reservation over this is that these two were not bound into one single volume. This, in my opinion is a trivial matter. In fact it is a common practice among judges of first instance trying a criminal case to prepare separate judgments for distinctive aspects of a case; for example, why defence was called or the reason for the admission or the refusal to admit a caution statement after voir dire (a trial

G

H

I

A within a trial). This practice is acceptable as long as there is, at the end of the trial, a speaking judgment which is comprehensible; it can be in parts dealing with distinctive aspects of the same case.

B [21] The second issue relates to a passage in the grounds of judgment of the High Court after defence was called which says:

C Berdasarkan sebab-sebab di atas saya berpendapat pembelaan telah gagal untuk menimbulkan keraguan yang munasabah di dalam kes pendakwaan di atas imbangan kebarangkalian. Daripada keterangan yang ada saya berpendapat pihak pendakwaan telah berjaya membuktikan kesnya ditahap melampaui keraguan yang munasabah.

Translated into English:

D Based on the reasons aforesaid, I am of the opinion that the defence has failed to raise a reasonable doubt in the prosecution case on the balance of probability. From the evidence adduced I am of the view that the prosecution has proved its case against the accused beyond reasonable doubt.

E [22] Against this, the appellant argued that trial judge has misdirected himself on the standard of proof required of the defence.

F [23] It is trite that all that is necessary is for an accused person in his defence to cast a reasonable doubt in the prosecution's case to earn an acquittal — see Mohamad Radhi bin Yaakob v Public Prosecutor [1991] 3 MLJ 169 at p 171 and K Saravanan all S Karuppiah v Public Prosecutor [2002] 3 MLJ 465; [2002] 4 CLJ 144 at p 153. Though the trial judge had this in his forethought, he added 'on the balance of probability'. But as reiterated by the Supreme Court in Mohamad Radhi bin Yaakob v Public Prosecutor [1991] 3 MLJ 169: 'To satisfy this test it is not so much the words used by the judge, but rather the actual application of the test to the facts of the case that matters'. I am of the view that having read the judgment of the High Court in its entirety, particularly the reasons advanced to support the decision, this error caused by the addition of the phrase 'on the balance of probability' is insufficient to affect his finding that the appellant is guilty of the crime as charged. The inclusion of this phrase in my view is a mere verbosity — see K Saravanan all S Karuppiah v Public Prosecutor; Rosli bin Supardi v Public Prosecutor [2002] 3 MLJ 256; [2002] 3 CLJ 544, which does not affect the conclusion arrived at by the trial judge.

I [24] For reasons aforesaid, I would dismiss this appeal. My learned brother Judge Richard Malanjum CJ (Sabah and Sarawak) agrees with me in this decision. And pursuant to s 78 of the Courts of Judicature Act 1964, in the absence of my brother judge, the late Augustine Paul FCJ, this decision that this appeal is dismissed is by majority given by Richard Malanjum CJ (Sabah and Sarawak) and myself as the remaining judges who heard this case. A Appeal dismissed.

Reported by Kohila Nesan B

C

D

E

F

G

H

I